Continuing information on Supreme Court's decision on sexual orientation: We must not be silent about justice. Governments, the church teaches, should uphold the family as the foundation of society. The law should recognize and protect the unique gift that authentic marital relationships offer the world. It is not unjust to treat things differently. Two people of the same sex cannot form a conjugal union that brings forth children. Men and women, though of equal dignity, are not the same and this truth is what makes it possible for them to unite and bring new life into the world. It is unjust to disregard the reality of who we are created male and female, or to honor that disregard by others. It is also unjust to elevate "sexual orientation" as if a sexual attraction is an inherent aspect of one's "sex". The redefinition of humanity involved in gender ideology does particular harm to women and girls, whose hard-won rights in the economy and society are put at risk when men can claim the word and identity of "woman" for themselves for any pursuit or purpose.
